The average period of operation, which was one hundred and ninety-two and a half days, was slightly longer than in the preceding year and has only twice been exceeded.

SYNOPSIS

"You've fallen here to a half-share in plenty of trouble," the lawyer told Gerald Keene. "The Broken Spur has been systematically looting the ranch, and old Joe Carr, your partner, is drinking himself into a stupor."

Dad Kane, desert rat and luckless prospector till now, had sent for Dustin and Spike Goddard, who had grubstaked him, of his discovery of a rich gold mine, and showed samples of the ore.

Dustin unexpectedly came along with Stone and Edith, riding fence, and seeing them, stops and talks to Edith. He mentions their dispute could be settled by marrying him, and Edith refuses his proposal with remarks that make Dustin furious. He insults Stone, who promptly throws him into a pool of water.

Stone tells Crewe, his foreman, about his meeting with Dustin. Stone and Crewe go to Stone to send a telegram to Gerald Keene. While at Stone's attempt to send a telegram, Stone proves more than a match for his enemies.

Dustin learns that Gerald Keene has been sent for, and also that Duro Stone has seen the Broken Spur ranch. He sets out with Dad Kane to find the location of his gold discovery. Dad Kane shows Dustin the mine.

They go back to camp, and Dustin shoots Kane. He fires the shooting on Poyot Greck, a drug addict, who is suspected by the narcotic he had taken, did not know whether he was guilty or not. They bury Kane and then return to the Broken Spur ranch. Meanwhile at the Hour Glass, Kane and Stone speculate as to the meaning of entries in the notebook belonging to Dene Kane. Kane had found Stone's clues of a possible solution, and accompanied by Edith Kane, rides out to Red Water to test out his theory, which proves correct, and they find the rich gold deposit mentioned in the notebook of the notebook.

As they return to the ranch, they meet Dustin leaving his house, and he deliberately tries to ride down Stone.

struck the crest of the withers. The gripping legs closed sharply behind the forward cincha and his body swung forward to place his weight where it belonged . . . above that tremendous fore-hand, the weight-carrier. The next moment when the big black was within fifteen yards, the great Isabella horse launched himself, a living thunderbolt, against him.

The red dust swirled high above them and eddied down in a closely-cloaked cloud from the heart of that cloud came one sharp oath. The next moment Edith, sitting her half-crazed horse well to the side of the trail, saw

She saw the great Isabella horse, bleeding at mouth and nostrils, pitching wildly as he slid to a halt. She saw Stone . . . Duro Stone, the amateur cow-puncher, who had learned his lore from Wild West fiction and who undoubtedly thought his apparel from catalog; sitting that pitching horse like a centaur and she saw, and for one short moment did not believe her own eyes, Sam Dustin's big black lying on his side, one leg kicking wildly with his rider as still as last death beneath him.

"Oh, my God!" she cried sharply, "you killed him!"

"I'm afraid not . . ." Stone pitched out of saddle. "Ride on and don't let him die," he said sharply. "Go at once!"

That strange tone in his voice made her stare. Then she went on down the trail and so missed what took place.

Stone almost leaped at Dustin's prostrate figure. A quick jab of his spurred heel made the black struggle to his feet and Duro dragged the unconscious man from the dust of the trail.

Dustin's face was cut from brow to chin and a little trickle of blood ran down his forehead. He was sweating with the dust and sweat and grime of the encounter. He was breathing heavily in great gasps and as Stone knelt beside him, he saw the man lying inertly across Duro's arm.

He saw him on his back along the path under a great mesquite bush and squatted by him.

"I'm sure sorry I didn't break your fool neck," he muttered. "I wonder if you've got anything in your poke that'll cheer your throat?"

His lean hands made short work of Dustin's pockets. From the inner coat-pocket he pulled a narrow strip of paper. It was filled with papers that he examined swiftly but carefully. At sight of one of the papers he gave a low whistle of surprise, a clear note of alarm at Dad Kane's descent into a second glimpse.

There was no sign of returning consciousness and after a second glance, Stone returned to a carter's remark of the papers.

"Huh. It's clear enough," he muttered. "It's old Joe Carr's note for eleven thousand dollars made out to John Pegram and by his transferred to Sam Dustin. Looks bad for Carr."

"You'd better go in the house at once, Edith," he said heavily. "Joe wants to talk with me about this. She glanced uncertainly at him and started for the house and as she went, Stone, seeing her eyes, could leave soon to a new light in them. The moment the door closed behind her, Crewe turned to Stone.

"He'll be broke 'lose at last," he said. "We know now exactly where that bound Dustin rode. Do you?"

"The last I saw of him he wasn't staid at all," said Stone grimly. "He was lyn' in the arena with his horse on top of him . . ."

"Yeah. And because of that, you'll get a bullet through your back some night if you're not careful."

"What did Dustin want?" asked Stone.

"He came to see Joe," said Crewe calmly. "He offered to sell the horse owned by Soda Springs and he offered a lot of other things, too."

"You've heard . . . Go on, what's the price? What's the man want?"

"Provided Edith will marry him," Crewe jerked out.

"I owe you one for this," he growled, struggling to his feet.

course in riding. You can get a cook or a horse-wrangler at some Duro Ranch to show you how to act as a horse. It only needs practice. I'd do it myself but I haven't got time. My time seems to be taken up with trying to break your damned neck instead of saving it!"

The utter scorn in his voice made Dustin wince. He flushed in silence and thrust a hand into his coat pocket. His grunt of satisfaction was expressive. His clothing had not been soiled. He walked unsteadily to his horse that stood with drooping head and heaving flanks.

"Of course you know I'll pay you for this. If my cinch hadn't broken . . ."

That was true enough. The rear cinch had parted.

"A weak cinch is a sure sign of mental degeneracy," said Stone. "Any good text-book will tell you to be sure of your equipment before you try trick riding."

While Dustin was staring evilly at him, he swung into saddle and thrust his hand into his coat pocket. He heard the horse. Crewe was standing on the porch and greeted them as they rode up to the house.

"I'd you all meet up with Dustin anywhere along the trail?" he asked as Stone took Edith's horse.

"Yeah. We met him all right," said Stone. "He tried to ride his horse down but his horse slipped I reckon."

"Slipped nothing . . ." Edith laughed sharply. "That big black of his doesn't slip. The man tried to ride Duro down in the golve de caballo . . . He . . . He made a mistake. That's all."

Frank Crewe asked no questions. He knew what happens when a man makes a mistake in the golve de caballo. There a man has but one chance.

"You'd better go in the house at once, Edith," he said heavily. "Joe wants to talk with me about this."

She glanced uncertainly at him and started for the house and as she went, Stone, seeing her eyes, could leave soon to a new light in them. The moment the door closed behind her, Crewe turned to Stone.

Another Rocking Stone

New One Found In Nova Scotia Weighs 72 Tons

While the rocking stone situated at the northwest arm at Halifax, believed to be a relic of a glacial period, has held prominence for many years because of its isolated fact of nature, the district of Springfield, Nova Scotia, at the time has had hidden away a similar and equally unique relic which has just been uncovered.

It is something similar to the North Arm rocking stone, which is said to weigh in the vicinity of 162 tons. The latest phenomenon, which has just been uncovered, is situated at Blanket Hill near the newly constructed road leading from the highway to the milling operations of Hawkins and Zweigler. A gigantic rock, estimated by reliable authority to weigh 72 tons, is balanced so perfectly on a much smaller rock that any man of ordinary strength can rock the titling piece of granite back and forth on its foundation.

Many a would-be Hercules these days, on route to or from lumber camps, carries a moment to exhibit to "greenies" his great strength, by lifting the 72-ton mass of solid granite. In reality it is no remarkable feat at all, although it sounds and looks impossible. Only about 100 pounds' lift is sufficient to start the rock, and by heaving and fro, yet it never rolls off its base.

English Woman Claims She Owns All Of Labrador

The proprietress of a London, Eng., cold cream shop—Mrs. M. Cowan—has just announced that she owns Labrador, rock, stock and barrel. Already she has cast possessive eyes on North America's most northerly 120,000 square miles, and if her lawyers are right she won't take "no" for an answer.

And here's how she shies her claims:

Her family genealogical table asserts that she is one of 300 direct relatives of a fabulously wealthy Dutch merchant, one Isaac de Penha, whose death in 1700 was a real shock to no less a person than William of Orange, King of England. The king had every reason to feel badly, too, says Mrs. Cowan, for he owed his life to the rich merchant. It seems that monarch and merchant were sailing close to each other when the royal ship sprung a leak. De la Penha rescued the king, thereby avoiding what might have developed into a decidedly unpleasant piece of business.

As a purple-head reward De la Penha got Labrador and a standing invitation to visit with his mother-in-law when he was in England. At any rate that's Mrs. Cowan's story. And she is bound she will stick to it as well as the present owners if she wins her case.—Toronto Star Weekly.

Comparatively New Sport

Europe Know Little Of Skiing Forty Years Ago

The popularity of skiing, which has been the opening of a training school in London, Eng., makes it interesting to recall that this sport was utterly unknown to most Europeans 40 years ago, according to a London newspaper writer.

Lord Conway, when describing his experiences in Spitzbergen no longer than about 1860 felt it necessary to explain in detail the nature and use of skis for his British readers, and of skis with such gusto that probably he could register a claim to having first set his countrymen—and women—on the scent of a new winter amusement. He suggested the ski might be found useful in Alpine climbing, and even ventured a prophecy that "ski-running might become a popular sport in Switzerland."

Little Helps For This Week

"Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him." Psalm 37:7.

"Trust in Him at all times." Psalm 42:8.

Do not thou ask when comes His hour. Then when it shall aid thee best. Trust His faithfulness and power. Trust in Him, and quiet rest.

I had found communion with God to consist not only in the silencing of the outward man, but in the silencing of every thought, and in the concentration of the soul and all its powers into a simple quiet watching and waiting for the food which the Heavenly Father might see fit to give or withhold. In no case could it be sent empty away for, if comfort, light or joy were withheld the act of humble waiting at the gate of heavenly wisdom could not but work patience in it, and thus render it by humility and obedience more "meet to be partaker of the inheritance of the saints in light," and also more blessed in itself.—M. A. Kelly.

"Rest in the Lord, wait patiently for Him." In Hebrew the verb "to wait" and "to let Him mould them." Keep still, and he will mould thee to the right shape.—Martin Luther.

An Odd Weather Map

Shows Eight Kinds Of Air Exist Over North America

A new kind of weather map, showing eight kinds of air over the United States, was presented to aviation leaders at the annual meeting of the Institute of aeronautical sciences in New York.

The eight, discovery largely by airplane, are all the kinds that exist in North America. They contain, and split all the types of weather troubles known, including those which forecasters go wrong.

The map is a step in "air-mass" analysis, the new system of forecasting being inaugurated by the U.S. Weather Bureau, was developed by Dr. Irving Krick of the California Institute of Technology.
